Working to preserve patient access

When fighting to preserve access to lifesaving therapies for people coping with rare, genetic and debilitating diseases, we all must work together. The Plasma Protein Therapeutics Association and its members work tirelessly to ensure patient access and value the collaboration required to protect that access to the medically appropriate therapy.

PPTA
Plasma Protein Therapeutics Association

www.politico.com/preservepatientaccess
www.pptaglobal.org
www.donatingplasma.org

Judy was 28 when she was diagnosed with alpha-1 antitrypsin deficiency, a rare, life-threatening genetic lung disease. Doctors told her she had no more than 10 years to live. Today, Judy is in her 50s thanks to a passion for living and regular infusions of a plasma protein therapy.